a. University Mission:

b. Program Mission if more than one program, list each mission)

The mission of the mals program is to provide students the opportunity to design an individual interdisciplinary master's degree program by drawing on the resources of three or more departments. Many students are academic interests that do not neatly align with any of our current graduate programs but which can be pursued by combining courses from three or more areas and working under the supervision of faculty in those areas. For example, WSU does not have a graduate program in Medieval & Renaissance Studies but students interested in the area can combine course work in the departments of History, English, Art History hilosophy, and Modern and Classical Languages to create a curriculum that mirrors graduate programs in medieval and renaissance Studies at other institutions. Given the breadth and extent of WSU's existing graduate programs, the opportunities for serious interdisciplinary graduate work are extensive: Asian Studies, American Studies, Classical Studies,

The overall quality of the program is excellent. The extent and breadth of existing graduate programs at WSU provides mals sends practically unlimited opportunities to combine course work in various departments into a coherent, integrated interdisciplinary master's level curriculum. The mals

Provide asessment here:

Given the diversity of programs created by mals students, there is no "most common" type of positions students ca expect to find. Some students in the program are already teachers seeking to increase and expand their teaching competenciessome are pursuing interests in museum studies to prepare for careers in museums; some are workin in social services and seeking to upgrade their expertise in new areas; some are interested in communications from a multi-disciplinary perspective; someæpreparing to apply to Ph.D. programs or law schools; etc.

As long as there are students who have academic interests that do not neatly align with WSU's current graduate departments, there will be a need for the mals program. This demand is undersgothed fact that we have admitted 12 highly qualified students to the program for fall 2011.
